April—National Library Week! Connect with YOUR Library!!!

Visit your library or lovelibraries.org to celebrate!

Libraries are important all the time, but they are celebrated once a year in April. "If you love your library, say it loud and proud: vocal community support helps libraries secure much-needed funding and reminds hard working library staff that their efforts are appreciated." (ALA)

The theme focuses on the library's ability to connect people to technology, but I believe the most important connection that libraries can help with is helping people connect with each other. If anything the pandemic taught us, it was that isolationism is very hard on people. The lack of social interaction during that time period affected our library patrons young and old.

I could relate story after story about how the library has helped our seniors and how, because of the library, folks have made connections. It does my heart good when someone comes up and says "so and so has missed exercise or lunch the last couple of times, should we check on them?" When seniors have been in the hospital others are thinking of them, asking about them and then welcoming them back when they return. CONNECTION (Socialization) is so important! Not only for our seniors but for our children and young families. Watching the children interact with others at story hour and toddler time is precious. Just as important are the families meeting, greeting and having time to discuss with adults. The library provides a safe setting for this kind of interaction.

You might find a great book, use the computer, attend a great program or story time, or make a new friend when you connect with your library.
